AECOM's $6B Offer for URS Keeps the Company Whole

By Debra K. Rubin

Four months after URS Corp. agreed to an activist investor's demand for a reshaped board and new strategic options to boost its share price, the firm is set to be acquired by AECOM.

The deal, worth about $6 billion in cash, stock and assumed debt, would keep URS intact.

The firms, which announced the transaction on July 13, said the acquisition would create the latest global giant, with new capacity in oil-and-gas, power and government services, more than $19 billion in revenue and 95,000 employees in 150 countries.

There was speculation that options URS was considering might involve a breakup of the corporation's business units.

"This combination creates an industry leader with the ability to deliver more capabilities from a broad global platform," said Michael S. Burke, AECOM CEO since last December. The firms said Burke will be CEO of the combined company, which will have a "new operating management structure" from both companies.

Burke told ENR in a July 14 interview that he met with URS Chairman and CEO Martin Koffel in March, as the firm was announcing an agreement with key shareholder Jana Partners to find ways to boost company value.

"We had been looking at URS for awhile, but quickly concluded that the two organizations were more complementary than we had thought," said Burke.

In a July 14 conference call, Burke termed the transaction "a transformational milestone" for AECOM that will boost its ability to "compete for and deliver on integrated services contracts." Most of URS' services are "complementary" to AECOM, he added.

The $56.31-per-share price is about 19% more than URS' 30-day average closing price and 8.2% more than its $52.02 closing price (NYSE:URS) on July 11. The cash-and-stock portion of the acquisition offer is $4 billion. URS shares closed 12% higher at $58.40 at the close of trading on

AECOM's CEO Michael Burke will lead the megacompany created by firm's announced acquisition of URS.

July 14, which Bloomberg said was its largest gain since March 2009.

"I believe the Street had thought that AECOM would be one of the logical acquirers," said Maxim Sytchev, managing director and head of research at Dundee Capital Markets, Toronto. The firm (NYSE: ACM) closed at $31.76 on July 11 and rose 10% to $34.98 at trading close on July 14.

Andrej Avelini, managing director of industry M&A broker and financial consultant EFCC, estimated the transaction valuation at eight times earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization (EBITDA). He said that multiple was about the median for recent sector deals; however, he said it was "but a bit low" compared to the still-pending major purchases of U.K. contractor Kentz by Canada-based SNC-Lavalin and Foster Wheeler by U.K.-based AMEC. Both are about 10 times the EBITDA, he said.

"This is a rather large deal for AECOM to pull off relative to its history," said Jamie Cook, Credit Suisse sector lead analyst, in a July 13 note. While acknowledging the firm's estimated $250 million in cost synergies, "we fail to see revenue synergy opportunities."

Sacramento HVAC Firms Say Filling Technician Jobs Getting Tougher

Some of Sacramento's big heating and air conditioning companies say they have good jobs available in an industry with strong growth prospects, but they're having a hard time finding qualified workers or a new generation of trainees.

Industry leaders blame the worker shortage on several factors: fewer schools offering training certificates, increasingly complex HVAC technology and what they say is a reluctance among young workers to commit to a trade that traditionally involves a long-term commitment in order to excel.

"It used to require brawn, but now it requires brains and brawn," said Ruzwa Cooper, president of Sacramento-based Cooper Oates Air Conditioning, which provides commercial air conditioning services throughout the Sacramento region and San Joaquin Valley. "Today, we're look-
